OLD NORWICH OAK WAS INSPIRATION FOR POEM.
Appeared in New York Paper Under Date of April, 1862.

The New York Observer under date of April 10, 1862, has an unpublished poem of 1738. The Observer states at the head of the poem: "The people of Norwich, Conn., will recognize the signature and allusions of the following poem relating to scenes and events in that vicinity. We do not know the name of the author for the original copy."
The subject of the poem is:
Lines Addressed to a young lady accompanying a champion of the cause of freedom, who had been taken from a tree near Norwich, Jan. 16, 1793.

It is a very long poem, containing many stanzas, and is full of allusions, was here when the first settlers came to Norwich.

"Long time it stood till emigration crossed the deep—
And many a changing scene transpired beneath its canopy of green.
The red man here in secret council met—here a captive chief was bound."
An humble cotter built within the shade,
In majesty and beauty unsurpassed
This patriarchal monarch of the past Was deemed, for he had seen The red man come and in the night the clouds were tinged with flame.
The morning dawned and near the blackened home his majesty ever fled.
The lifeless monarch towered above the dead."

The writer, S. C. H., was told this tale when a child by a man of great age, and he was thrilled by the story she "wrought this fine linked chain from the aged oak."
The poem has been sent here by Mrs.
Hurlbut of Brooklyn to Mrs. Thomas Harland.

Robbed on Washington Street.

ner residing at Norwich Town, was knocked down on Washington street the postoffice in this city during the quarter ending December 31st, an increase of 2,135 over the previous quarter.

Nine recruits were received yesterday, six of whom counted on the Growing About Preston Bridge.

People keep coming into this office to grow about the Preston bridge. It has been lighted they say, for three or four nights and they break their noses and contuse their shins trying to pick their way over it.
Through the dark. We wish somebody would see about it and put a stop to these complaints.

Recruits were enlisted at the provost marshal's office on Thursday all of whom applied on the quota of this town. At this rate we shall be clear from the draft some time next summer. Encouraging thought.
